Category:CasioQ: Stacktrace not showing fully I was running into a bug in a Rails gem and decided to see what it would look like in the Rails console by simply running `AppName::ModelName.method`. I found that it was trying to execute a method named "instance_of". When I look further at the stacktrace it is truncated after "::<" class AppName::ModelName '

of the uninsured motorist coverage on the owner's vehicle. In McClelland v. State Farm Mutual Automobile Ins. Co., 205 F.2d 818 (7th Cir.1953), the state court had not overruled Tarney v. Green, supra, but had made a new ruling permitting an award of damages to the injured party for the conscious pain and suffering sustained by him. This possibility of expanding liability of the insurance company was put to the insured with ambiguous language that he should make every effort to effect a good and timely claim. He did not elect, and the insurance company paid for the value of the service station from the funds of the damaged car. Later, the state court, in a different case, decided that the liability of the Ionization by the fifth harmonic of a Nd:YAG laser at 532 nm has been used to examine the ability of jet plasma sources to extend the range of velocities for low-pressure Ne, N<sub>2</sub>O and Ar plasmas. The center of a 20-cm long inlet tube produces a supersonic jet containing (approximately equal to 12 atm) Ne atoms, which propagate at approximately Mach 3 with an energy distribution ranging from 0.3 to 10 eV. Negative ions are generated at or near the source at energies ranging from 10 to >50 eV. Negatively charged particles are slowed down by the residual gas by-products of the gas-plasma interaction. As the plasma conditions are changed, ion charge state distributions are shifted to more positive charges, as expected. In addition, the source creates large numbers of very high-energy (approximately equal to 100 eV) positive ions that are not seen with non-laser sources. A possible source for the high energy positive ions is from the electron dynamics and electronic excitation. These results indicate that lasers can extend the kinetic energy range for plasmas when used as independent ion sources in conjunction with plasma sources.

The City of North Vancouver has announced plans to establish a Vancouver Island cannabis-specific retail store. Mayor Darrell Mussatto made the announcement at a press conference in West Vancouver on Monday, noting there were six months left in the current retail marijuana sales licence application process and the city was trying to open one of the two-store market. The city already received one application from another applicant in West Vancouver. Story continues below advertisement "We do have the interest for a Vancouver Island [establishment]. We have some other sites that we're reviewing, but we want to have a Vancouver Island location," he said. Mr. Mussatto said the application will be forwarded to the province, which has not yet indicated it would allow one of the six applications in the Vancouver Island area. "We're expecting a call back from the provincial government," he said. Over the last two months, The Canadian Press visited nine communities across the province for assessments on whether to allow marijuana retail stores. The assessments are in the process of being finalized, with results expected to be given to the province in the new year. Under new legislation passed this month, cannabis stores in the province
